J first · An invented toy-game starting place
Selected first source · family J · invented formative brief

Read this complete source with its own response spaces (j-first-response.md). Show your own idea your way. An adult can read or record your words without choosing a design for you. You can do one part and return later.

U1 · A job for your place
Imagine an invented toy-game starting place. The job is: a broad marker has a chosen game starting spot. You can choose your own arrangement for this job. This is a pretend tabletop/flat model, not a place for people to climb into.

U2 · What you can use
Choose from the actual large materials/actions your educator has approved and made available: a blank drawing surface, suitable broad parts, or another locally approved option. None is promised by this source. You may draw, communicate a plan or direct an adult. No new tool, material or purchase is required.

U3 · Your ideas
Show two different ideas for the job. Choose one or combine them into an own idea. A different position, form or arrangement can communicate a different idea; you do not need written sentences. No design solution is supplied here.

U4 · Steps and an actual action
Show a material choice and your first few steps. Save your first response before a model or hint. After capture, choose whether to perform a locally approved making action, direct an adult or keep a plan. Tell or show who actually did any physical action; if no action occurred, leave its result unknown.

U5 · Try or prefer
After first response capture, you may actually try a broad approved visitor mark in your own available model, or explain what you would keep/change for the job or your preference. An optional willing person can offer their own actual words. No trial, reply or success is supplied here; an imagined visitor cannot tell you what they felt.

U6 · A place you really know
Choose an actual already familiar place if a suitable verified source/willing arranger account is available. Say how you know the place and name one specific choice a person made, using that actual source/account. A new drawing or fact does not make a place familiar. If familiarity or the person’s reason is unknown, say so. No private address or family story is required.
