F · first · A message for an imaginary bookmark workshop

Complete source · use one useful part in your usual communication

This is a selected first opportunity. Check prior exposure; known material is not called fresh.

Complete invitation

Invent a short message for an imaginary bookmark workshop. Choose what it is for and whether to use picture only, optional own words or another usual cue. No cutting, binding, recording or writing is needed. You may make one part, direct a willing helper, keep a plan, choose another purpose, or pass.

All supplied facts are in that complete invitation. The response areas are blank, with no hidden picture, event, model answer or earlier child work. Invented contexts are fiction. Actual conditional source/sharing cases supply no event.

Ways to respond and honest evidence

The adult reads the whole brief neutrally and can give one short part at a time. Use usual communication, broad blank paper/board, exact description, wanted scribing or an agreeing helper who follows accepted directions. No independent reading/writing, required number of frames, words, public audience, sound, recording or time limit. You can change the job, leave a part unmade, rest, keep it private or pass. A reason is optional.

Capture this opportunity's initial own contribution and exact help before a model, answer, clarification that supplies an idea or any additional teaching. Keep the first-stage and later-stage records separate. Own directions, actual made work, unmade plan, child operation, helper operation and adult-added detail are separate facts. A made child-authored work may involve helper fabrication; that is not child tool handling. A different own job can be worthwhile creative work while the requested-brief component remains unelicited. No single composition is the answer.

Complete source · use one useful part in your usual communication · continued

Actual source encounter, genuine maker account, actual deliberate reception and actual reply/NONE require their own real evidence. Neither an invitation nor a filled blank supplies an event. No whole-code, year, state, human learning gain or diagnosis is decided by this opportunity.

Own prompts

1. What own job or idea do I choose?

2. Picture only, own optional words or another available cue: what fits today?

3. What actually exists or happened, and who drew/wrote/provided the cue?

4. What would I keep, try, change or leave?

This exact invitation's own complete blank. No other source or later blank is issued with it.
