Make a useful change

Want a clearer instruction, another familiar example or a better access route? Start with one small change. Keep the original version beside your draft so someone can see what changed.

1. Name the resource link and version.

2. Give the proposed changed words or a small edited file.

3. Say why the change helps and which teaching question it affects.

4. Include the relevant factual or curriculum source and its date, if needed.

5. State who owns the contribution, which sharing rights apply and what you changed. Use invented examples; keep children and private records out of the draft.

Offer the draft for review

Use SubjectNest's contribution page for current instructions, then its contact route. The web message supports up to 2000 characters; longer editable attachments can go to hello@neuroforge.io. Follow the form's reply-email, consent and spam-check requirements. A familiar adult should handle contact, rather than a child entering personal information.

Routes checked 8 October 2026. Saving, printing or copying a draft is not submission. Proposals enter review; sending one does not publish it or replace its sharing licence. No form submission or receipt is promised by this packet.

Keep the scope clear

An educator can adapt the original educational material under its full CC BY 4.0 terms: give credit, link the licence and indicate changes. Original software has separate Apache 2.0 terms; authority material, external source facts, fonts and renderer terms remain separate. Do not add unreviewed translations, cultural permissions, actual child information or a whole-year attainment claim.

The reproducible creator validates one admitted source edition. A changed teaching edition can be edited and offered separately; it is not silently admitted as that original source. Keep the original full source edit guidance and complete terms alongside this convenience route.
